

Clearer skies ahead

Staff reports

Hanford Sentinel, Friday, Oct. 10, 2014

Those smoggy smoky skies are going to stick around for a while.

“We just have stagnant air,” Scott Borgioli, chief meteorologist at WeatherAg, explained. “We don’t have any weather systems that have passed through to clear out the Valley.”

Borgioli predicts the local air quality will improve sometime next week. He said models are suggesting clearer skies and cooler weather starting Wednesday.

In the meantime, Valley Air District suggests those who suffer chronic heart and lung diseases to limit their outdoor activity.

For more information on real-time air quality visit the Real-Time Air Advisory Network (RAAN) at www.valleyair.org